THE FORTUNE 500

THE STORIES

67 The Big Get Bigger

Why do some companies grow stronger with size, while others stagger under their own weight? Explore with us the science of scale. BY JERRY USEEM

74 The Defiant One

Unlike its rivals, Exxon Mobil doesn't much care about alternative fuels and doesn't try to please the greens. Is CEO Rex Tillerson nuts—or shrewd? BY GEOFF COLVIN

80 American Brandscape

It's not just the size of the revenue but the breadth of products that makes a FORTUNE 500 company impressive. In the showcase: PepsiCo.

84 Gap: Decline of a Dynasty

The story of how the Fisher family turned Gap into one of America's top retailers—then pulled the strings as it unraveled. BY JENNIFER REINGOLD

94 Dell in Repair

It's been a rough year in Round Rock, Texas. An inside look at Michael Dell's campaign to fix the company he founded. BY DAVID WHITFORD

101 Buying Binge

Say goodbye to BellSouth, Guidant, and Kerr-McGee—all swallowed up last year in the biggest buyout frenzy since 2000. Private-equity deals led the way. A FORTUNE information graphic.

112 CEO Confidential

The strange existence of Ram Charan, the most influential consultant on the planet. BY DAVID WHITFORD

FORTUNE BRANDS

NO.
294

No, Fortune Brands has nothing to do with our magazine. And its product line—Locks, Doors, and Booze—sounds like the title of a pulp novel. But together these items helped boost the company's profits 34% in 2006. For another remarkable gallery of American products, see the PepsiCo showcase on page 80.
