24 Original Research: Alarm Fatigue: Exploring the Adaptive and Maladaptive Coping Strategies of Nurses

By Olawunmi Obisesan, Ericka Barber, Patricia Martin, Nicole Brougham, and Heidi Tymkew

This qualitative, phenomenological study explores oncology nurses' lived experiences with alarms and the adaptive and maladaptive strategies they use to cope with alarm fatigue.

32 Functional Medicine in Nursing

By Brigitte Sager

NCPD

This article explains the core principles of functional medicine—a patient-centered approach that seeks to address the underlying causes of disease rather than focusing on managing the symptoms—and how nurses can learn and incorporate functional medicine into their practice.

42 Evidence-Based Decision-Making: Critical Appraisal of Evidence for DNP-Prepared Nurses

By Ellen Fineout-Overholt, Deana Hays, Susan Farus-Brown, Mary C. Zonsius, and Kerry A. Milner

This article, the fourth in a series on how to teach and facilitate learning about evidence-based practice and quality improvement, focuses on how partnering with a librarian is essential to finalizing the body of evidence needed to answer the clinical question, and how to take the body of evidence through the first two phases of the critical appraisal process: rapid critical appraisal and evaluation.

Supplemental digital content is available in the text.

51 EBDM: Commentary: What Nurses in Advanced Practice Know

By Alice E. Dupler

Why nurse educators must provide DNP students with the tools they need to expand their knowledge.

54 Program Evaluation: Development of a Referral Pathway to Address Health-Harming Legal Needs at a Federally Qualified Health Center

By Marija J. Bulatovic, Sarah Sallen, and Virginia Reising

This article describes the implementation of a referral pathway to connect patients at a community health center with a medical-legal partnership team to address their legal needs and improve their access to health care.
