

CONTENTS

28 H.A. 2548

BRUCE GILLEY, a doctoral student in Chinese politics at Princeton University and a former REVIEW contributing editor, remembers Zhao Ziyang as a man who might have transformed China, but failed because of his reluctance to take risks and work outside the Party. PAGE 7

MASARU TAMAMOTO, a senior fellow of the World Policy Institute, urges Japan to use the tsunami disaster as a chance to forge a new relationship with China. Asia needs a new paradigm for regional unity following the model of post-war France and Germany. PAGE 10

DALI L. YANG, a professor of political science at the University of Chicago, points to demographic trends to show why China's labor market and political structure could soon change in unexpected ways. PAGE 19

JAGDISH BHAGWATI, a professor of economics at Columbia University, participated in the writing of a new report for the WTO with recommendations for reforms needed to safeguard the trading system. PAGE 25

JEROME COHEN, a practicing lawyer and professor of law at New York University, criticizes some of the practices common in Chinese arbitration tribunals and proposes 10 changes to the rules to correct them. PAGE 31

STANLEY SAMARASINGHE, director of the International Centre for Ethnic Studies in Kandy, analyzes the political squabbling in Sri Lanka over aid money. Donors have an opportunity to use their leverage to broker a new push toward a peace settlement. PAGE 38

JAMES VAN ZORGE, a political analyst based in Jakarta, urges the Indonesian government to rein in the military and radical Muslim organizations in Aceh. PAGE 41

COL. KEVIN MADDEN, a long-time Koreanist, debunks some of the myths about Kim Jong Il's despotic regime. PAGE 44

SALIL TRIPATHI, a former REVIEW correspondent, argues that the Ambani brothers' bust-up reveals Reliance as just another run-of-the-mill Asian family-run conglomerate. PAGE 48

CHINESE ECONOMISTS present their predictions for the country's growth in 2005 and examine the potential pitfalls. PAGE 52

IN TRANSLATION: He Guanghu, a Beijing scholar of philosophy, reasons that attacking Taiwan for wanting independence would be immoral and barbaric. PAGE 52

REVIEWS:

DANNY GITTINGS on two analyses of Hong Kong's political retardation. PAGE 64 • DAVID CHANDLER on a capacious biography of Pol Pot. PAGE 67 • IAN JOHNSON on a reporter's memoir of personal discovery in China. PAGE 69 • BENJAMIN READ on a hagiography of Jiang Zemin. PAGE 70 • NANCY DEWOLF SMITH on two studies of extremism in Pakistan. PAGE 72 • JOHN FRANKENSTEIN on a scholarly study of China's military doctrine. • FROM THE ARCHIVES: In 1992, Japan squandered an opportunity to advance the study of earthquakes and tsunamis and their aftermaths. PAGE 78