

CONTENTS

73 / E.O. 2549

VIVEK MOORTHY, a professor of economics at the Indian Institute of Technology in Bangalore, tells us there is little need to worry about India's revenue deficit. In fact, a crisis mentality could do more harm than good. PAGE 8

PHILIP ANDREWS-SPEED, an energy expert and author, outlines the steps China should take—in the short and the long term—to avoid a potentially catastrophic energy crisis. PAGE 13

JOHN J. TKACIK, JR., a research analyst at the Heritage Foundation and former diplomat, discovers Mongolia's surprisingly robust democracy, and suggests it is a model for Central Asian nations to follow. PAGE 18

SHIGENORI OKAZAKI, a Japan-based political commentator, takes a closer look at Prime Minister Junichiro Koizumi's foreign-policy stance and examines some of the underlying factors that help answer the question: Why does he behave as he does? PAGE 23

MASARU TAMAMOTO, a senior fellow at the Japan Institute of International Affairs, says that pride and prestige on the part of both Japan and China are preventing the two countries from forging meaningful ties. PAGE 26

COLUM MURPHY, deputy editor of the REVIEW, examines the latest foreign-policy alternative put forward by the Japanese opposition leader Katsuya Okada, and finds many unanswered questions. PAGE 29

PETER PIOT, executive director of UNAIDS, describes steps to be taken to inhibit the spread of AIDS in Asia, which last year claimed half a million lives in the region. PAGE 33

JAVED HAMID, regional director, East Asia and the Pacific for the International Finance Corporation, says that China's banks must address governance issues before even considering to list on the market. PAGE 36

JOHN HEPBURN, a campaigner with Greenpeace in Australia, warns that Asia is becoming the new GE battleground, as food giants in pursuit of profit edge into the region. PAGE 40

BARUN MITRA, director of Liberty Institute, says that commerce not conservation is the best source of protection for the world's dwindling population of tigers. PAGE 44

IN TRANSLATION: Yan Xuetong writing in the Global Times argues the mainland must maintain its aggressive stance on Taiwan. PAGE 48

REVIEWS:

MICHAEL BARNETT on one Japanese woman's quest to change the face of humanitarian aid. PAGE 52 • JONATHAN MIRSKY on a tome that tells Mao's unknown story. PAGE 55 • ROBERT A. KAPP on a study of the forgotten architects of China's economy. PAGE 59 • SALIL TRIPATHI on a collection of essays on India's soul. PAGE 62 • RUPERT HAMMOND-CHAMBERS on a critique of Taiwan's globally integrated economy. PAGE 64 • FRED ARMENTROUT on an analysis of Hong Kong's honestly inefficient civil service. PAGE 67 • STEPHEN J. MORRIS on a controversial account of U.S. involvement in Vietnam. PAGE 70 • RON GLUCKMAN on one photojournalist's attempt to come to terms with the horrors of Cambodian genocide. PAGE 74 • FROM THE ARCHIVES: In 2001, the REVIEW's David Lague warned that when Hong Kong sneezes, the world catches the flu. PAGE 77