

CONTENTS

JONATHAN ANDERSON, chief Asian economist at UBS, argues that behind foreign banks' frenzied China acquisitions lies a more mundane reality of a low-growth future. PAGE 7

KO MISHIMA, an international affairs analyst, explains why any plan to reform Japan must tackle that country's bureaucracy. PAGE 13

ROBERT WARD, senior editor with the Economist Intelligence Unit, says Junichiro Koizumi must look ahead to securing a legacy. PAGE 17

JOHN TKACIK, a research analyst at the Heritage Foundation and former diplomat, casts a critical eye on the Sep. 19 "breakthrough" at the six-party talks. PAGE 21

SALIL TRIPATHI, a London-based writer, says the BJP must temper its Hindu nationalism if it wants to regain power in an increasingly moderate India. PAGE 24

TOM COGHLAN, reporter for the Telegraph, details the formidable postelection impediments to a secure and peaceful Afghanistan. PAGE 28

BRUCE GILLEY, former contributing editor of the REVIEW, says that 2005 could be the turning point that derails China's rise. PAGE 32

EDMUND TERENCE GOMEZ of the U.N. Research Institute for Social Development explores the unintended consequences of Malaysia's affirmative action policies. PAGE 36

NAILENE CHOU WIEST, visiting scholar at the University of Hong Kong, uncovers the arcane issues ruffling the robes of Chinese and Vatican mandarins and preventing a long-awaited rapprochement. PAGE 40

CHRIS BAKER AND PASUK PHONGPAICHT, Thai politics watchers, analyze mounting criticisms of Thailand's prime minister. PAGE 44

ZAMA COURSEN-NEFF, senior researcher with Human Rights Watch, chronicles the brutality of Papua New Guinea's police force. PAGE 48

FARISH A. NOOR, political historian and researcher, explores the challenges facing two of India's most famous madrassas. PAGE 53

DON HANNA, global head of emerging market economic and market analysis at Citigroup, says bad policy, not oil subsidies, is at the heart of Indonesia's recent economic woes. PAGE 57

IN TRANSLATION: Hu Shuli writes in Caijing that populist medical reform proposals could do more harm than good. PAGE 60

REVIEWS:

HUGO RESTALL on a collection of essays examining U.S.-Taiwan relations. PAGE 62 • FELIKS PLESZCZYNSKI on a poignant analysis of the roots of the Cambodian genocide. PAGE 64 • MACABE KELIHER on a fresh theory about the development of science in imperial China. PAGE 66 • NAILENE CHOU WIEST on an old China hand's take on "new New China." PAGE 68 • CHRISTOPHER LINGLE on a shallow and hyperbolic take on the economic prowess of China and India. PAGE 70 • FRANCIS MORIARTY on scholarly perspectives of Hong Kong's Article 23. PAGE 72 • FRED ARMENTROUT on a history of Japanese imperialism in Southeast Asia. PAGE 74 • ROBERT A. KAPP on gripping tales of successful Chinese entrepreneurs. PAGE 76 • FROM THE ARCHIVES A news account and editorial, both from 1998, on the causes of the last rupiah crash. PAGE 78.