FEATURE ARTICLES

- 230 Hypersexuality Among Cognitively Impaired Older Adults

Meredith Wallace and Meredith Safer

Although less common than other behavioral issues, such as aggression and agitation, hypersexuality presents complex logistical and ethical problems for caregivers. This paper reviews the current literature on hypersexual behavior, assessment essentials, non-pharmacological and pharmacological treatment approaches, identifying the need for standardization as well as caregiver education and training.

- 238 Helping Nursing Homes "At Risk" for Quality Problems: A Statewide Evaluation

Marilyn J. Rantz, Debra Cheshire, Marcia Flesner, Gregory F. Petroski, Lanis Hicks, Greg Alexander, Myra A. Aud, Carol Siem, Katy Nguyen, Clara Boland, and Sharon Thomas

Quality improvements for "at risk" nursing homes demonstrate the clinical effectiveness of on-site clinical consultation by gerontological expert nurses with graduate nursing education.

- 250 Facilitating Aerobic Exercise Training in Older Adults with Alzheimer's Disease

Fang Yu and Ann Kolanowski

Emerging science suggests that aerobic exercise might modify the pathophysiology of Alzheimer's disease (AD) and improve cognition. In this paper we describe the development of a moderate-intensity aerobic exercise program for this population and report results from its initial testing in a feasibility trial completed by two persons with AD.
