FEATURE ARTICLES

430 The Role of the CNA Pain Assessment Tool (CPAT) in the Pain Management of Nursing Home Residents with Dementia

Frank A. Cervo, Patricia Bruckenthal, Suzanne Fields, Lory E. Bright-Long, John J. Chen, Guangxiang Zhang, and Ian Strongwater

The CPAT is useful in evaluating the effects of pain treatment, and may reduce falls, verbally aggressive behaviors, and antipsychotic usage in nursing home residents with dementia.

439 Nursing Strategies for Promoting and Maintaining Function among Community-Living Older Adults: The CAPABLE Intervention

Anthony T. Pho, Elizabeth K. Tanner, Jill Roth, Meghan E. Greeley, Carmalyn D. Dorsey, and Sarah L. Szanton

This article focuses on the nursing component of Community Aging in Place: Advancing Better Living for Elders and how it inter-relates with the content and processes of the occupational therapist and handyman to address both individual and environmental factors that contribute to disability.

446 The Effects of a Foot and Toenail Care Protocol for Older Adults

Helen Y.L. Chan, Diana T.F. Lee, Edward M.F. Leung, Chui-wah Man, Kwok-man Lai, Man-wai Leung, and Irene K.Y. Wong

This study aims to develop and examine the effects of a foot and toenail care protocol on promoting foot health in older adults. It includes a thorough assessment of foot health, footwear conditions and specific self-care ability.

454 A National Survey of Medication Aides: Education, Supervision, and Work Role by Work Setting

Jill S. Budden

Medication aides are a type of unlicensed assistive personnel that administer medications. A survey was developed to provide insights into medication aide education, supervision, and work role. Study implications are discussed.

465 Reliability and Validity Assessment of the Job Attitude Scale

Kelly Flannery, Barbara Resnick, Elizabeth Galik, Jane Lipscomb, and Kathleen McPhaul

Job satisfaction among nursing assistants (NAs) is associated with NA retention, resident satisfaction and resident's quality of care.

473 Long-Term Care Acquired Urinary Tract Infections' Antibiotic Resistance Patterns and Empiric Therapy: A Pilot Study

Abby Parish and Katie Holliday

The study has implications for antibiotic stewardship with recommendations for empiric antibiotic selection for long-term care (LTC) acquired urinary tract infections given the prevalence of fluoroquinolone-resistant bacterial strains in the LTC setting.
