

Departments

12 COMPANY INDEX

14 FROM THE EDITOR Hot Water

While doing nothing about climate change puts businesses and populations in great peril, there are fortunes to be made and fortunes to be saved by those who take steps to prevent and mitigate it.

- 21 FORETHOUGHT: SPECIAL REPORT
CLIMATE BUSINESS | BUSINESS CLIMATE
Climate change will transform the business landscape. Companies will see the price of carbon emissions rise steeply, in both monetary and social terms. Businesses will face new costs and new risks and discover new ways to seize competitive advantage. Here's what executives need to do to prepare for the coming carbon-constrained world.

47 HBR CASE STUDY The CEO's Private Investigation Joseph Finder

If a CEO suspects her colleagues of wrongdoing, is it appropriate for her to commission a private investigation? Commentators for this fictional case study include a former FBI deputy assistant director, executives at Lockheed Martin, a business lawyer at Katten Muchin Rosenman, and the vice chairman of EMC.

63 MANAGING YOURSELF Manage Your Energy, Not Your Time Tony Schwartz

Want to accomplish dramatically more and do it better? The answer is not working longer hours but increasing your capacity for work through systematic rituals that recharge your four key sources of energy.

104 STRATEGIC HUMOR

- 128 DIFFERENT VOICE
My Extreme MBA
A Conversation with Rory Stewart
Negotiating leadership challenges in hostile territory takes a balance of principled commitment and canny pragmatism.

- 139 TOOL KIT
How Valuable Is Word of Mouth?
V. Kumar, J. Andrew Petersen, and Robert P. Leone
Your most profitable customers are probably not the ones who buy the most – they're the ones who do the best job of referring your firm to others. Use this tool to distinguish the two groups – and raise the lifetime value of both.

155 LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

161 EXECUTIVE SUMMARIES

- 168 PANEL DISCUSSION
Losers and Winners
Don Moyer
You can't win them all. But you don't have to. You can prosper even when most of your ventures fail – so long as your successes are successful enough.

