Departments

14 COMPANY INDEX

16 FROM THE EDITOR

22 STRATEGIC HUMOR

26 FORETHOUGHT
The long-predicted collapse of television advertising could well be upon us...Virtual venues can foster very real collaboration and learning...Prediction markets for nonprofits could maximize social return on investment...Taking an interest in employees is good for business...Understand the difference between Chinese and Russian entrepreneurs...Radical corporate transparency takes some intriguing forms...Do you know the real value of your products' design features?

111 TOOL KIT
The Incumbent’s Advantage
Ian C. MacMillan and Larry Selden
Big-company CEOs have a powerful secret weapon against upstart competitors. Do you know what it is?

123 HBR AT LARGE
What Was Privacy?
Lew McCreary
In the olden days—say, 20 years ago—most people’s tastes, behavior, and other sensitive information were shielded from public scrutiny. Now social networks, online shopping, and data mining, among other things, are changing consumers’ expectations. As new privacy norms emerge, how should business adapt?

41 HBR CASE STUDY
Can Knockoffs Knock Out Your Business?
Paul F. Nunes and Narendra P. Mulani
CEO Bill Bronson is determined to stop the counterfeiting of his company’s adventure gear and clothing. But the fight is proving costly, and there’s no end to the fakes in sight. How far should Bronson go to foil the copycats? Commentators include Giorgio Brandazza, J. Merrick “Rick” Taggart, and Candace S. Cummings.

138 EXECUTIVE SUMMARIES

144 PANEL DISCUSSION
Training Daze
Don Moyer
In the training programs that work, your best employees pass their knowledge down in person—slowly, patiently, and systematically.

53 FIRST PERSON
Evaluating the CEO
Stephen P. Kaufman
The author, a former head of Arrow Electronics, reveals how he got the board to adopt a multifaceted approach for assessing his performance—one that delved beyond the numbers and facilitated real feedback through firsthand observations and conversations with executives who knew him best.