Departments

12 COMPANY INDEX

14 FROM THE EDITOR

20 STRATEGIC HUMOR

22 FORETHOUGHT
Some behaviors you just can’t buy...
China’s economic growth will hit the wall unless institutions improve...A valuable peek into customers’ lives...The journey of heroes and managers...Why firms pay such good money for even the worst executive talent...Praise them, and they will perform...
Cutting IT waste...What genes teach us about innovation...Textbook leadership.

33 HBR CASE STUDY
The Layoff
Bronwyn Fryer
Sales and earnings are way off at Astrigo, a home improvement chain that’s always been deeply committed to its employees.
Cutting 10% of the staff looks like the only way to save the company. But which 10% should get the ax? With commentary by Laurence J. Stybel and Maryanne Peabody, Jürgen Dormann, and Robert L. Sutton.

43 FIRST PERSON
The Greening of Petrobras
José Sergio Gabrielli de Azevedo Eight years ago, Greenpeace activists left dead, oil-soaked birds at the headquarters of energy giant Petrobras and chained themselves to the building while local fishermen marched outside. That was then. Today the company is globally acknowledged as a leader in environmental sustainability.
Here’s the story of its transformation.

101 TOOL KIT
Option Games: The Key to Competing in Capital-Intensive Industries
Nelson Ferreira, Jayanti Kar, and Lenos Trigeorgis
The traditional valuation methods – namely, discounted cash flow and real options – fall short in quantifying the value of both flexibility and commitment in big-budget investments. A new tool will help managers make rational choices between alternative strategies.

109 BIG PICTURE
Tapping the World’s Innovation
Hot Spots
John Kao
As more countries aim to become innovation hot spots, a global market for innovation services is emerging. Get ready to tap that market by figuring out which countries’ models best fit your company’s strategic needs. And be prepared to mix and match the best elements of different models.

116 LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

118 EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

124 PANEL DISCUSSION
Act-Learn, Act-Learn
Don Moyer
A swift reaction is vital to solving certain problems, but beware of becoming overly attached to the first solution you try. Often it’s not the right one, and you’ll need to move past it to see what really works.
Features

48 In a Downturn, Provoke Your Customers
Philip Lay, Todd Hewlin, and Geoffrey Moore
Arrive with a strong, original point of view on your business customers' problems, and you just might have a hope of cracking their frozen budgets.

58 When Should a Process Be Art, Not Science?
Joseph M. Hall and M. Eric Johnson
The modern mania for process standardization overlooks one important fact: Many processes are more art than science. And when managers try to rigidly control art, they end up squashing flexibility, creativity, and dynamism.

66 Value-for-Money Strategies for Recessionary Times
Peter J. Williamson and Ming Zeng
The global downturn spells opportunity for emerging giants, which are poised to use the lessons they've learned serving value-conscious consumers at home to disrupt Western markets. Unless multinationals from developed countries learn from these rivals, they will not be the winners when the recession ends.

76 Making Mobility Matter
Haig R. Nalbantian and Richard A. Guzzo
Rotating managers through various jobs can help them develop leadership skills—but it can also do more harm than good if you're not mindful of the trade-offs. Here's a framework you can use to make the right choices for your company.

86 Six Ways Companies Mismanage Risk
René M. Stulz
As many firms have learned, even top-notch risk-management systems can fail. Knowing how and why may help you strengthen yours.

continued on page 8