Go Ahead, Have Regrets
Michael Craig Miller, MD
In this first in a series of articles created in partnership with Harvard Health Publications, a Harvard psychiatry professor explores the upside of regret. There’s a reason it’s been ranked the most valuable of the negative emotions.

33 HBR CASE STUDY
Who Can Help the CEO?
Phil Terry
Eliot Robbens is the CEO of a two-year-old spinout that hasn’t yet made good on its ambitious financial projections. He’s just lost his second sales VP, and the company’s board will be meeting in a few days. Now he’s frantically seeking advice – from an old friend on the board, from a squash opponent, from his wife. None of them can provide any help. Commentary by Jaihindra Rao, Susan J. Ashford, and Stephen J. Socolof.

43 DIFFERENT VOICE
Leadership Lessons from Abraham Lincoln
A Conversation with Historian Doris Kearns Goodwin
The Pulitzer Prize winner who unleashed the team-of-rivals concept talks about how modern leaders can make it work.

99 MANAGING YOURSELF
Decoding Resistance to Change
Jeffrey D. Ford and Laurie W. Ford
Resistance, properly understood as feedback, can be a valuable resource that helps you implement change effectively. Here’s the decoder you need to make that happen.

105 BEST PRACTICE
Getting Brand Communities Right
Susan Fournier and Lara Lee
Building a strong brand community with your customers is not a task that can be left to the marketing department. It requires an organization-wide commitment to understanding people’s needs, relinquishing control, and leveraging conflict. Not all companies can pull it off. Can yours?

Broken Trust
Don Moyer
In an economic crisis, when trust in the system and others is at a low ebb, your impulse may be to hold your breath and wait for something to happen. But that’s the worst mistake you can make.
