Contents

SPOTLIGHT ON THE 21ST-CENTURY WORKSPACE

50 Balancing "We" and "Me" The open office is the dominant form of workplace design for good reason—it fosters collaboration, learning, and engagement—but it’s far from perfect. Building on new research into the nature of privacy, office design experts from Steelcase offer workspace strategies that support collaboration. Christine Congdon, Donna Flynn, and Melanie Redman

58 The Transparency Trap Too much openness can make employees feel exposed and afraid to try anything new. To increase creativity and efficiency, companies need to create zones of privacy within open environments. Ethan Bernstein

68 Workspaces That Move People When it comes to boosting performance, face-to-face interactions are by far the most important activity in an office. Ben Waber, Jennifer Magnolfi, and Greg Lindsay

ABOVE
Michael Wolf
The Transparent City 72, 2008

TALK THE WALK
It’s what the best leaders do. hbr.org/go/talk
THE BIG IDEA

The Rise (and Likely Fall) of the Talent Economy
Talent has become the key asset in the modern economy—and that shift has a dark side. Roger L. Martin

Capture More Value
Businesses constantly innovate to create more value—but too often they fail to maximize the rewards of their breakthroughs. A new framework can help them spot missed opportunities. Stefan Michel

Profits at the Bottom of the Pyramid
A framework to help companies earn profits while pursuing socially beneficial ventures in low-income markets Erik Simanis and Duncan Duke

Hacking Tech's Diversity Problem
How can tech companies increase their dismally low numbers of women? By tackling biases with an iterative, experimental approach in the "lean start-up" tradition. Joan C. Williams

Changing consumers' behavior and rethinking the way products are made and delivered are the most common hurdles companies face in bottom-of-the-pyramid markets.

35 HOW I DID IT
Fallon's Chairman on Getting Clients to Take Creative Risks
The rigorous strategy behind the agency's edgy campaigns can persuade clients to take the leap. Pat Fallon
From the Editor

Interaction

Idea Watch

23 EXECUTION
Putting Sales at the Center of Strategy
How to connect the C-suite's plans with realities in the field PLUS Designing charitable initiatives that drive sales, and the danger of touting a product as "the best"

30 DEFEND YOUR RESEARCH
People Don't Like Anything (or Anyone) Moving Toward Them
Advertisers, take note: Approaching objects and images inspire negative feelings.

32 VISION STATEMENT
What We'll Be Doing in 2022
Predictions from the U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics

39 STRATEGIC HUMOR

Turning losses into opportunities page 105

The future of U.S. employment page 32

"I don't need to be first; I just need to be best." page 124

105 Experience

105 MANAGING YOURSELF
Rebounding from Career Setbacks
Transforming anger and self-doubt into motivation and excitement about new possibilities Mitchell Lee Marks, Philip Mirvis, and Ron Ashkenas

113 CASE STUDY
Should a Female Director "Tone It Down"? Sarah's repeated requests for financial data have annoyed other board members. Boris Groysberg and Deborah Bell

118 SYNTHESIS
The digital age, then and now Walter Frick

121 EXECUTIVE SUMMARIES

124 LIFE'S WORK
Bobbi Brown The cosmetics entrepreneur on building a brand within a big company