Practice pointers from this issue of Nursing2007

➤ In uterine fibroid embolization, tiny beadlike particles are injected into arteries supplying blood to the tumor, p. 26.

➤ Because secondary abdominal compartment syndrome can occur more than once, continue monitoring the patient well into the postoperative period, p. 38.

➤ When treating a patient with abdominal compartment syndrome, place central lines above the diaphragm so I.V. medications can reach the heart, p. 39.

➤ A patient with diabetes should have A1C testing at least every 3 months if she's changing therapy or hasn't reached target, p. 45.
